Authority Magazine

Kody Hanner is a homesteader, proud homeschool mom, and the creator of The Homestead Education; a company that provides educational resources that aim to teach children self-sufficiency through hands-on learning. Inspired by her own family's story, her education, and background in agriculture, Hanner's family made the move to Idaho to start their own homestead. Through homeschooling her own children, she realized there was a gap in the market for educational curriculum and resources that met her needs and those in the homesteading community. Her primary goal with the business is to prepare the next generation and expose children to the life skills and fun that come from working in the agricultural industry; particularly in a time where much of the educational focus has been in the STEM and tech-related fields.

"When Kody opens up, she can inspire a crowd to believe in their ability to accomplish goals."

"...her gift for being vulnerable made me feel like I am not alone in my struggles."

SPEAKING TOPICS

Raising Self-Sufficient Children

We want our children to be responsible, be motivated toward their goals, and be someone that can be relied on. The key is to build confidence and ownership from a young age.

Homeschooling Like a Homesteader

With so many people embracing a self-sufficient lifestyle, we should be looking for ways to include our children. To do this, we need to create hands-on learning opportunities through life-skills and family relationships.

Variation for Homeschool-Specific Events titled, Child-Led Learning. My husband enjoys joining me for this talk to give a dad's perspective.

Starting a Homestead Business

With over 20 years of experience in small business, including the agriculture and food industries, Kody works with homesteaders on the steps of sorting through the overwhelm to choose the best income-producing product or service for their homestead.

Good Food and Stubborn Wives (with Ron Hanner)

Hear my husband's story of being diagnosed with end-stage liver disease and how we turned our lives around to pursue a natural lifestyle. Our heart-wrenching story will bring tears to your eyes but doesn't leave out some good laughs, steps to cleaner living, and working with your spouse.
